BRIAN HUBBLE

J'ai récemment tenu une séance d'autographes, et signé et négocié la vente de feuilles de papier vierges. Le langage et les rituels qui régissent le monde de l'art deviennent ainsi partie intégrante de cette performance, contribuant à lui donner tout son sens. Mon travail conteste les mythes contemporains qui entourent ce système. Je prétends que briser ces illusions n'en diminuera en rien la magie.

En même temps, mon travail admet qu'il ne peut y avoir de premier plan artistique sans un arrière plan contextuel. Par divers médias, j'étudie cette structure avec mes propres moyens de production, ainsi que l'espace dans lequel les valeurs d'échange et d'esthétique se croisent. C'est ce système de relations qui m'a amené à aligner des carreaux pris sur les sols extra-territoriaux des Nations-Unies, sur le sol d'une galerie, et de le nommer "No Mans land". Les spectateurs étaient invités à marcher dessus et à ressentir le sentiment d'être nulle-part. Ces gestes figés et ces objets oscillent entre intégrité et apparence, l'arbitraire et l'officiel. Placebos et récits s'enracinent.

L'interaction entre les mythologies et l'influence du contexte dans la perception, se reflète dans mon oeuvre et y révèle une authenticité plus étrange que jamais. Cela me permet de transmettre quelque chose qui soit proche des impulsions qui me poussent à constamment évoluer. Peter Land explique, "Je pense que mon travail artistique est un instrument dans ma quête pour trouver un sens valable à mon existence. Cependant, les structures éthiques que j'essaie de créer autour de moi deviennent invalides, ou sont inopérantes, lorsque mon idée du sens change ou est en cours de changement. Mon sens de la réalité s'effondre, et doit être reconstruit sur une base continue".

Le questionnement du sens, du système, et du contexte est ce qui motive ma démarche. Construire l'artifice, infléchi par une touche caustique mais ludique d'anarchie et d'alchimie, n'est qu'une partie de la stratégie.

— Brian Hubble

I recently held an autograph session, and signed and negotiated sales of blank sheets of paper. The language and rituals that devise the art system became part of the content of this performance, assisting in giving it meaning. My work challenges contemporary myths that envelop this system. I propose that breaking down its illusions will not diminish the magic.

At the same time, my work acknowledges that there is no artistic foreground without a contextual background. Through various media, I examine this structure in relation to my own means of production, and the space where exchange and aesthetic values cross. It is this relationship that allows me to align tiles on a gallery floor I took from the "extraterritorial" grounds of the United Nations, and title it "No Man's Land". Viewers were encouraged to walk on them and feel the experience of being nowhere. These deadpan gestures and objects oscillate between integrity and appearance, the arbitrary and the official. Placebos and narratives take root.

The interplay between mythologies and the role of context in perception reflect one another in my work to reveal an authenticity stranger than either alone. This allows me to convey something close to the motivating impulses behind my ever-evolving stance. Peter Land explains, "I guess that my work with art is instrumental in my pursuit to establish a valid meaning behind my existence. However, the ethical structures that I try to create around me become invalid, or don't apply, as my idea of meaning changes or is being changed. My sense of reality collapses, and has to be rebuilt on an ongoing basis."

The questioning of meaning, system, and context are vehicles that motivate my endeavor. Constructing artifice inflected with a caustic but playful touch of anarchy and alchemy is just part of the strategy.

Paolo Giardi exploite de nombreuses disciplines au service de l'art du montage. Il en résulte une fascinante exploration du langage de la citation, de l'allusion et de l'adaptation. Usant d'association, il tente simultanément de manipuler, de déplacer des images préexistantes, hors de leur contexte original, brouillant ainsi l'expérience de la mémoire et de la perception.

Son expérience est aussi celle d'un concepteur de vitrines, d'un illustrateur, ou d'un graveur. Toutes ces strates sont clairement visibles dans son œuvre. Le sens du déplacement, généré par une combinaison de langages différents et pourtant vaguement familiers, d'imagerie reconnaissable, et d'autres éléments plus graphiques et abstraits, évoque la nature d'une mémoire oubliée et lointaine. Ce qui se trouve devant nos yeux devient hiéroglyphe à déchiffrer ; une telle imagerie pourra à la fois amuser ou effrayer le spectateur.

Paolo Giardi works across a variety of disciplines producing art that explores the technique of the montage. This has led to a fascination with, and exploration of, the languages of citation, allusion and adaptation. Through the exercise of association, he simultaneously attempts to manipulate and transport existing images out of their original context, blurring the experiences of memory and perception. His characters, like in a Beckett play, seems always absorbed by a stage they do not belong to.

Giardi's background is also that of a window dresser, an illustrator, a retail designer, a print maker, and all these layers are clearly visible in his work. The sense of displacement, generated by a combination of different and yet vaguely familiar idioms, recognisable imagery and more graphic and abstract elements, evokes the nature of a forgotten or distant memory. What lays before our eyes becomes a hieroglyph to be deciphered. Such imagery could be at once amusing or alarming to the viewer.

PAOLO GIARDI: THE BOTANIST {You Can Learn a Lot of Things From the Flowers}

Étude sur la Conservation Botanique Posé par des Modèles Professionnels

Le projet Vous Pouvez Apprendre Beaucoup des Fleurs permet de mettre en lumière une collection préservée, de spécimens de plantes, qui fût assemblée par un botaniste amateur passionné.

La réelle identité de ce self-made man demeure entourée de mystère, et tout ce que l'on en connaît, c'est s'étendent de l'alchimie à l'ésotérisme en passant par l'astrologie et le pouvoir magique des amulettes égyptiennes; la mythomanie, entre autres, étaient sa principale occupation.

Depuis ses études en écologie, il est possible de remonter au fondement de ses idées grâce aux travaux de Carl Linnaeus, un botaniste du 18ème siècle. Dans son livre Systema Naturae, Linnaeus, établit, en tout premier, un système de nomenclature révolutionnaire, basé sur le nombre d'organes reproducteurs des fleurs, mettant ainsi en évidence la sexualité des plantes. Comme l'un des derniers apôtres passionné des enseignements de Linnaeus, notre inexpérimenté botaniste décida de combiner ses recherches en conservation botanique avec sa passion pour "les jeunes filles", jeunes femmes photographiées dans des poses suggestives pour les pages centrales des magazines pour adultes.

Le résultat de cette curieuse obsession prend la forme d'un vaste Herbarium de créatures hybrides, ou ce qu'il nomma parfois, les "femme-fleurs". Créé au sein de l'interception et des disjonctions de la silhouette des plantes, ce qui était autrefois destiné au regard du voyeur et devenu un objet d'étude et d'analyse. Les projections et les stéréotypes sexuels masculins sont obtenus par médiation et atténués par la transformation. La plante et l'objet du désir : les deux réunies sont égales.

Le botaniste devient le voyeur et vice-versa.

"Puisque vous ne pouvez pas être ma femme, vous serez certainement mon arbre. Je vous porterai pour ma couronne ... Et, comme l'éternelle jeunesse est mienne, vous serez aussi toujours verte, et vos feuilles ne connaîtront jamais de fin."

Apollon et Daphné dans les Métamorphoses d'Ovide.

A l'occasion de sa première exposition personnelle The Botanist à Less Is More Projects, l'artiste Paolo Giardi présente la série complète de You Can Learn A Lot of Things From The Flowers, 66 découpages de pages centrales de magazines d'époque, réalisés entre 2011 et 2014.

Le titre de la série est tiré de la chanson All In The Golden Afternoon - la scène des fleurs qui parlent - dans Alice au Pays des Merveilles de Walt Disney 1951. Le projet est également un hommage au merveilleux et évocateur univers créé par Marcel Proust dans son ode à la jeunesse, A l'Ombre des Jeunes Filles en Fleur.

Dans une tentative de préservation des ressources culturelles l'artiste adopte, non seulement le rôle fictif du botaniste, mais également le rôle du conservateur concerné par la re-matérialisation d'une image et d'un concept appropriés.

A Study on Botanical Conservation Posed by Professional Models

The project 'You Can Learn a Lot of Things From the Flowers' brings back to light a forgotten collection of preserved plant specimens that was once assembled by a passionate, amateur botanist. The true identity of this self-taught man remains shrouded in mystery and all that is known is his enormous appetite for pseudo-scientific research in the natural world.

From his studies in ecology it is possible to trace the foundation of his ideas back to the work of Carl Linnaeus, an eighteenth century Swedish botanist. In his book 'Systema Naturae', Linnaeus first attempted a revolutionary system of taxonomy based around the number of a flower's reproductive organs, thus recognising the sexuality of plants. The pollination of stamens and pistils occurring in the secrecy of voluptuous corollas were suddenly mimicking an alcove's romantic encounter. Botany opened up to the intimacy of sex.

As a late and devoted apostle of Linnaeus teachings, our inexperienced botanist decided to combine his research on botanical conservation with his passion for "les jeunes filles", young ladies photographed in seductive poses for the centrefolds of adult publications. The result of this curious obsession is an extensive collection of hybrid creatures where each playmate is morphed into the nymph Daphne. An Herbarium of botanical pin-ups.

Created within the interception and disjunctions of the plant silhouette, what was once the recipient of the voyeur's gaze has now become a specimen to be studied and analysed. The male sexual projections and stereotypes are mediated and mitigated by the transformation. The plant and the object of desire: the two things brought together are equal. The botanist becomes the voyeur and vice-versa.

'Since you cannot be my wife, you shall assuredly be my tree. I will wear you for my crown... And, as eternal youth is mine, you also shall be always green, and your leaf know no decay.'

- Apollo and Daphne in Ovid's 'Metamorphosis'

For 'The Botanist' - his first solo exhibition at Less Is More Projects- artist Paolo Giardi presents the extended series of 'You Can Learn a Lot of Things From the Flowers', 66 cut-out intervention on original vintage centrefold, created between 2011 and 2014.

The title of the series is borrowed from the lyrics of 'All In the Golden Afternoon' - the scene of the talking flowers- in Disney's 1951 'Alice in Wonderland'. The project is also a tribute to the wonderful and evocative world created by Marcel Proust in his ode to youth in 'A l'Ombre des Jeunes Filles en Fleur'.

In an attempt of preserving cultural resources the artist is adopting, not only the fictitious role of the botanist, but also of the role of the conservationist concerned with the re-materialisation of an appropriated image and concept.

'The Botanist' will be showing at Less Is More Projects from October 18th 2014.
